Sweden will highlight innovation in its pavilion at World Expo 2010 and how the country solves problems and improves people's living standards by its spirit of innovation.

The country signed a participation contract with Expo organiser today, and revealed that its pavilion would be a large square that is divided into four blocks by a crossroad in the center to comprise the image of its national flag.

The main concept of the pavilion, which has a floor area of 3,000 square meters, was a combination of urban and natural areas, said Christer Stenmark, chief designer of the pavilion. The three blocks represent the urban areas and another one which will be an open-air terrace represents the nature, he said.
The pavilion includes restaurants serving both Swedish and Chinese cuisine.

The cost of the pavilion is about US$10 million, and the Swedish government will spend a total of US$22.06 million for its Expo activities.
